

Socrates

Hello, my name is Socrates (Sock-rah-teez). I am a philosopher who taught my students by asking questions that were difficult to answer, such as "What is true justice?" "What is knowledge?" "What is goodness?" Many of my methods are still used today. The government thought that I was questioning its authority and put me to death by forcing me to drink poison.

Dress in a Greek tunic. Have two students from your team sit on the floor and act as your students while you speak. Then drink from a plastic bottle and pretend to die.

*Walk Through The Ancient World © CWE, Inc.
www.californiaweekly.com*